ASHLAND -- Ashland University's Environmental Lecture Series will continue its 20th year at 7:30 p.m. Jan. 26 when Jonathan Maul, assistant professor in environmental toxicology at the The Institute of Environmental and Human Health at Texas Tech University in Lubbock, Texas, presents a talk titled "Contaminants in aquatic ecosystems: Current issues across broad spatial scales."

The theme for the series this year is "Chemical Pollution in a Global Economy." Maul will give the free lecture in the Hawkins-Conard Student Center Auditorium.

The lecture will address current issues in ecotoxicology, such as the impact of contaminant mixtures in the environment, specific concerns about pharmaceuticals/pesticides and the impact of large toxic releases. Maul will look at examples that consider processes at the watershed scale up to a global scale.

Recent lectures are archived at www.ashland.edu/departments/environmental-science/lecture-series.
